

9.2 LESSON NOTES

RELATIONAL DATABASES EXPLAINED

- Made up of datasets in tables
- Every table has a relationship to one or more other tables
- They are joined by 'keys' such as identifiers that are used to append data from one table to another
- This type of structure is very efficient for storage as it reduces the amount of data needed

